Dear Mrs. Chance

I am sorry to have taken so long over your MS, but I have been very busy.

I agree with heartily with your view that it is important to think truthfully; & I am glad you are trying to make people understand your point.

In the past, men were willing to die for religious "truth"; the modern man is too sceptical to die for an opinion. I think the modern man is most easily moved where concealment of plain facts is involved. If during the war you had attempted to state that Kitchener was homosexual, you would have been regarded as pro-German. I think that now there are probably as many as 1% of Englishmen who would think that this statement ought to be prohibited. Many people have given up testing their children to see if they were found under gooseberry bushes.

Russell to Janet Chance on the MS. of her book, Intellectual Crime.
